

Masculinity, Motherhood, and Mockery

Masculinity, Motherhood,
and
Mockery

Psychoanalyzing Culture and the latmul Naven Rite in New Guinea

Eric Kline Silverman

Ann Arbor

THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN PRESS

Copyright © by the University of Michigan 2001
All rights reserved
Published in the United States of America by
The University of Michigan Press
Manufactured in the United States of America
⊗ Printed on acid-free paper

2004 2003 2002 2001 4 3 2 1

No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, or otherwise, without the written permission of the publisher.

A CIP catalog record for this book is available from the British Library.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Silverman, Eric Kline.

Masculinity, motherhood, and mockery : psychoanalyzing culture and the Iatmul Naven rite in New Guinea / Eric Kline Silverman.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 0-472-09757-1 (cloth : alk. paper) — ISBN 0-472-06757-5

(pbk. : alk. paper)

1. Naven (Iatmul rite)—Papua New Guinea—Tambanum. 2. Iatmul (Papua New Guinea people)—Rites and ceremonies. 3. Iatmul (Papua New Guinea people)—Kinship. 4. Iatmul (Papua New Guinea people)—Psychology. 5. Women, Iatmul—Social conditions. 6. Masculinity—Papua New Guinea—Tambanum. 7. Motherhood—Papua New Guinea—Tambanum. 8. Patrilineal kinship—Papua New Guinea—Tambanum. 9. Ceremonial exchange—Papua New Guinea—Tambanum. 10. Tambanum (Papua New Guinea)—Social life and customs. I. Title.

DU740.42 .s57 2001

306'.089'9912—dc21

2001000383

For Andrea. And for Sam and Zoe.

Contents

List of Illustrations	ix
Acknowledgments	xi
A Note to Readers	xv
1 Introduction: The Grotesque and the Moral	1
PART 1: COSMIC MASCULINITY
2 Food and Floods	15
3 Cosmic Bodies and Mythic Genders	27
4 Human Bodies	47
5 The Architectural Grotesque	64
PART 2: SOCIAL MASCULINITY
6 A Symbolic Forest of Kin	83
7 Oedipus in the Sepik	100
8 The Shame of Masculinity	116
PART 3: RITUAL MASCULINITY
9 Men and the Maternal Dialogics of Naven	133
10 Conclusion: Naven and the Pathos of Masculinity	159
Epilogue: Masculinity beyond the Sepik	174
Notes	179
References	203
Index	233

Illustrations

MAP

- 1 Sepik region of Papua New Guinea 16

FIGURES

- 1 Processing sago 19
- 2 Flute playing in the forest 34
- 3 The men's house 44
- 4 A house "mother" 65
- 5 A healthy gift of jewelry 93
- 6 Iai marriage and the repetition of names 107
- 7 The oedipal triangulation of iai marriage 108
- 8 Giving gifts after a naven ceremony 134
- 9 Mothers frolicking in a canoe 143
- 10 Honorific mud smearing 147
- 11 Women dance a naven with a spirit 153
- 12 The performance of nggariik 160

Acknowledgments

My greatest debt, for which I am both grateful and humbled, is to the very people whose conversations and lives I have tried to interpret: the men and women of Tambunum Village in the middle Sepik River, Papua New Guinea. Without their kindness, hospitality, unfaltering willingness to share their pains and passions, and, above all, extraordinary patience with my graceless presence and relentless questioning, none of this would have been possible. I can only hope that, after reading this book, they will greet my faults, as they did my successes, with good cheer. I wish I could think of an apt, or pithy, phrase that would adequately convey my deepest appreciation for the people of Tambunum—be it in English, tokpisin, the vernacular, or any other language for that matter. Alas, I am unable to do so.

I want to thank in particular various members of my adoptive household, including Yambukenandi, my father, and Agwi, my mother, who bestowed onto me the name of Kamikundiawan, or “one who talks like a fish”; Kara, Lecharimbo, Salapwaymbange, Salapwaymbo; Kamboi, Njoula, Miwai; Bonjoi, Mundjiindua, whose tragic death diminished the joy in the world, Tupwa, and Robina; among many others, both within the Kwongwomboli lineage and throughout the Shui Aimasa clan. Of my many teachers, I acknowledge, above all, Dmoiawan and Gamboromiawan. I also appreciate the erudition of Yambukenandi, Agumoimbange, Henry Wikwarlngawi, Linus Apingari, Biagimbange, Vaimuliawan, Karawusameli, Mendangumeli, and others. You have all taught me well. I hope I have proven to be a worthy student.

Fieldwork support was generously provided in 1988–90 by a Fulbright award and the Institute for Intercultural Studies. My return visit in 1994 was kindly aided by the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research and DePauw University. I received additional support during my graduate studies from the Department of Anthropology and the Graduate School of the University of Minnesota, including a Shevlin Fellowship and a Doctoral Dissertation Fellowship. More recently, DePauw University aided my research and writing through a Fisher Time-Out and various Faculty Development and Presidential Discretionary grants. In the field, my parents were an extraordinary source of unfaltering support and assistance, and I credit much of my education to them. Only through this generous financial and moral assistance have I been so fortunate to be able to pursue anthropology and the crossing of cultures.

In Papua New Guinea, many people and institutions aided my research and well-being: The East Sepik Provincial Government, the National Museum, Institute of Papua New Guinea Studies, Jan and Peter Barter and the crew of the Melanesian Discoverer, Mark Worth and Jim Elmslie, and Lawrie Bragge, all immediately come to mind. Prior to my initial fieldwork, I benefited from conversations with Rhoda Metraux, Douglas Newton (Metropolitan Museum of Art), Anthony Forge (Australian National University), and Meinhard Schuster, Brigitta Hauser-Schäublin, Florence Weiss, Milan Stanek, and Christian Kaufmann (Institute of Ethnology and the Museum of Ethnology, Basel).

Much of what I did, or did not, learn about anthropology occurred in Ford Hall, the former location of the Department of Anthropology at the University of Minnesota. Of my many teachers, I am particularly indebted to Gene Ogan's compassionate morality, theoretical judiciousness, and sweeping knowledge of Pacific anthropology. I continue to draw from John Ingham's psychological and psychoanalytic insights. Above all, I thank David Lipset, who proposed that I conduct fieldwork in the Sepik, suggested Tambunum, introduced me to the work of Bateson, supervised my doctoral dissertation, and aided me during moments of unforeseen difficulties in Wewak, prior to my arrival in the village. Our conversations about Bakhtin and Sepik ethnology have been an ongoing source of inspiration. I also wish to acknowledge dialogue with other Sepik anthropologists who have clarified various aspects of my thinking, or sought to do so, including Kathleen Barlow, Paul Roscoe, Nancy Lutkehaus, and Borut Telban.

Various portions of this manuscript were also enhanced by the opportunities to present papers at the Department of Anthropology, University of Hawaii; Australian National University; numerous classes at DePauw University; and annual meetings of the Association for Social Anthropology in Oceania and the American Anthropological Association. The Department of Anthropology at Brandeis University kindly lent me office space during summer 1995. I am also grateful to Michael Houseman and Carlo Severi for sending me a draft of their 1998 book about the naven rite and to Bernard Juillerat who did likewise with his 1999 article. By discussing my research and, in the case of the former, by differing, both of these publications encouraged me to refine my thinking.

M. Catherine Bateson and the Institute for Intercultural Studies kindly granted me permission to quote from Gregory Bateson's unpublished Iatmul fieldnotes.

Gilbert Herdt read a prior draft of this book and offered helpful advice. So, too, did two anonymous reviewers. I hope they are pleased with the results.

Susan McDowell and Edith Welliver kindly assisted my comprehension of German with their superb translations. I also hail various colleagues at DePauw University who provided intellectual stimulation and jovial conviviality; you know who you are. John M. Hollingsworth, Staff Cartographer of Indiana University, drew the fine map. The photos are all my own, taken in Tambunum in 1988–1990 and 1994; many of them were kindly developed by the Australian Museum.

At the University of Michigan Press, I acknowledge the patience and advice of Susan Whitlock and especially Ingrid Erickson.

Finally, for the simple reason that no dedication will ever suffice, I want to recognize again the innumerable contributions of Andrea and our two children, Sam and Zoe. They have enhanced this book and my own understanding of the human experience in more ways than they know. Sam and Zoe in particular have taught me that any analysis of culture that is devoid of a sense of its joys and wonders is truly banal. If there is a lesson here, it is you who have shown it to me.

A Note to Readers

The disclosures of anthropology must always tread uneasily between the facades and secrets of human experience. The men of Tambunum who abided my relentless questions with their insights and silences have all consented to my including in this book various descriptions and photos that they themselves conceal from women and youth. In deference to their sensitivities, I admonish readers to exercise prudence when disseminating this material. It is the least I can do.

