

Acknowledgments

*A*lthough nearly all of the analysis contained in this book is new, I have at various points drawn from my previously published work in presenting accounts of either particular cases or Supreme Court doctrine. I would thus like to thank the following copyright holders for permission to excerpt material from the original sources.

Effective Assistance of Counsel in Capital Cases: The Evolving Standard of Care, 1993 U. ILL. L. REV. 323 by Welsh S. White. Reprinted with permission of the University of Illinois Law Review.

Confessions in Capital Cases, 2003 U. ILL. L. REV. 979 by Welsh S. White. Reprinted with permission of the University of Illinois Law Review.

A Deadly Dilemma: Choices by Attorneys Representing “Innocent” Capital Defendants, 102 MICH. L. REV. 2001 (2004) by Welsh S. White. Reprinted with permission of the University of Michigan Law Review.

I would also like to thank the attorneys whom I have interviewed over the past three years. In the Methodology Appendix, I have named the ones who were willing to have their names identified. These attorneys, as well as several others who preferred not to have their names mentioned, were incredibly generous not only in spending time explaining their work to me but also in providing materials and other information that would enable me to have a better understanding of their cases and the ways in which skilled capital defense attorneys represent their clients. Without the help of these attorneys, this book could not have even been contemplated. Although all of the attorneys deserve thanks, I would especially like to thank Stephen Bright, Michael Burt, Michael Millman, David Bruck, and Russell Stetler for their invaluable comments on drafts of several of the chapters in the book.

I would also like to thank several people whose assistance enhanced the quality of the book. Albert Alschuler encouraged me to undertake this project and advised me as to how it should be approached. Andrew Taslitz gave me helpful advice relating to methodological issues. In addition to the others I have named, Stephen Garvey, John Parry, and David Harris read drafts of chapters and made helpful suggestions.

Finally, I would like to express my appreciation to the people who provided indispensable assistance in putting the manuscript together: the members of the Document Technology Center, LuAnn Driscoll, Karen Knochel, Darleen Mocello, and Barbara Salopek who did a superb job in preparing my manuscript; my research assistants, Timothy Lyon, Sara Chandler, and Paige Forster, who did an outstanding job in finding difficult sources and editing the manuscript; and my wife Linda, whose proofreading and other support were invaluable.
