Acknowledgments

This book and I owe a great deal to people and institutions on both sides of the Atlantic. They saved us from many things, even if not from all errors. My first thanks go to my professors at the University of Minnesota, Gianna Pomata, James Tracy, Mary Jo Maynes and Ann Waltner, for their multifaceted support and inspiration when this project was still a dissertation. I am equally indebted to Professor Heide Wunder at the Gesamthochschule-Universität Kassel in Germany. She too enabled me to write a dissertation and imagine its future as a book.

The generosity of several financial benefactors created the logistical preconditions for the book's completion. A research fellowship from the city government of Munich made it possible to spend enough time in German archives to carry out the necessary research. A fellowship from the Women's Studies in Religion Program at the Harvard Divinity School gave me both the leisure and the intellectual stimulation needed to write most of the manuscript. I was able to tie up loose ends and finish the book thanks to a faculty career development award from the University of California, Irvine. I am very grateful to these institutional sponsors.

I am also thankful for the professional advice of archivists and the kindness of the staff at the following institutions: Stadtarchiv München, Bayerisches Hauptstatsarchiv München, Diözesanarchiv des Erzbistums München-Freising, and Bayerische Staatsbibliothek. In addition, I am profoundly appreciative that the Franciscan sisters of Kloster Reutberg and the Englische Fräulein from the Institute in München-Nymphenburg were willing to open their doors and archives to me.

Many more people made this book better and me happier and I would like to record my gratitude to them. At Harvard, I benefited immensely from conversations with Ann Braude, Ann Mongoven, Susan Sered, Gail Sutherland, and Amy Hollywood (who has continued to make me think hard). Other friends and colleagues from the United States and Germany also nurtured this book and me: Stefan Breit, Susanna

Burghartz, Silvia Evangelisti, Otto Feldbauer, Valentin Groebner, Daniela Hacke, Paul Hoser, Sabine John, Thomas Krüßmann, Amy Leonard, Helmut Puff, Ulinka Rublack, Angela Stascheit, and Merry Wiesner. At UCI, I have been lucky to enjoy the support of wonderful colleagues, especially Elizabeth Allen, Sharon Block, Natalka Freeland, Marcia Klotz, Leerom Medovoi, Dave Newman, Annette Schlichter, and Heidi Tinsman. Lynn Mally and Bob Moeller deserve special thanks for their perceptive reading of the entire manuscript and for their warm friendship.

The two anonymous readers for the University of Michigan Press had excellent advice while Geoff Eley had unflagging faith in the project, Robert Frame read very closely and made incisive editorial suggestions. My research assistants, Rebecca Nykwest, Amy Rowe, and Anne Wohlcke, had lots of skills and a sense of humor. Thank you all.

Final thanks go to my family. I want to thank Frank Biess for making the coffee every morning and much more. I also want to thank my parents, Henrike and Ulrich Strasser, for moral and financial support at key moments and for providing me with a home to return to in Germany. During the many years that it took me to finish this book, my father fought a difficult battle with a debilitating illness. I am especially grateful for the opportunity to tell him that this book is done and dedicated to him.
