Literary Elements of the Story

Setting
New York City, Thanksgiving Day, 1898. In a park, a restaurant, and a hospital

Characters
Stuffy Pete, the Old Gentleman, a waiter, two doctors

Plot
The Old Gentleman meets Stuffy Pete every year and treats him to Thanksgiving dinner. This year Stuffy Pete has already eaten but forces himself to eat a second meal to keep up the tradition.

Conflict
To please the other person and maintain the tradition, each man endangers his own health.

Theme
People often sacrifice their own comforts to please other people. Traditions are important to people. A man shows he’s a gentleman by the way he acts, not by how much money he has.

Ending
Both men collapse on the street and end up being treated in the same hospital. Each man has kept his secret from the other to preserve their annual tradition.

Learning New Skills: Interviewing

Questions students might ask: Were you ever a wife like Marc’s first wife or like Alice? Did you write this story from experience or from imagination? Do you believe that many women are too indulgent of their husbands? Would you like to meet Kate Chopin, who wrote The Story of an Hour. In what way is her story similar to yours?

Grammar Review: Modals

Exercise 1

Alice uses the word “could” because Marc is not in a position to see his first wife. Alice suggests that the first wife has an expression on her face that might interest Marc.

Alice comes to a conclusion that Marc’s first wife is watching them.

Marc uses the word “would” because he is making a suggestion or offer. It is the polite use of the verb.
