Mini-Lesson #5: Using Possessives

Exercise 1 (pages 154–55)
1. My cousin Amy is a talented musician. Amy’s friends always ask her to sing for them. Her piano teacher’s comments are usually “bravo!” or “brilliant!” The only person who isn’t really impressed by Amy is Mr. Norris, her flute teacher. Mr. Norris’ (or Norris’s) words for Amy are simply, “Practice more.”
2. I’m beginning to worry about my brother Max’s forgetfulness. A few weeks ago he invited me to his girlfriend’s Christmas party. I got ready to go, and I waited for Max’s car to drive up in front of my house. Two hours passed. When I finally contacted Max on his cell phone, my forgetful brother’s response was, “Oh, did I invite you to that party?”
3. I think my family’s luck is changing. We went through some difficult times, but now things are looking up. For example, my father’s boss just offered him a better job with a higher salary and better hours. And my brother Chris’ car, which hadn’t been running well, only needed a couple of bolts tightened. Chris was glad that didn’t cost a lot to fix. I’ve also had some good luck recently. I’ve been worried about my classes at the college. However, lately my grades have been better and I’ve been seeing a lot less of my teachers’ red marks on my tests!

4. I have a lot of pets, and each one has a problem. First, my dog’s paw hurts. She limps most of the time, except when she’s chasing a squirrel. Next, my rabbits’ cage is too small. I had two rabbits, and they had babies, and you know how that goes. Also, my cat’s fur seems to be falling out. I know that cats lose some hair, but she is losing a lot. And finally, my canary’s throat must be sore or something, because he stopped singing last week. If I take care of all of these problems I’ll probably have to spend a lot of money!
