I have drawn upon the help of many people in preparing this manuscript. If it had not been for the immediate encouragement of LeAnn Fields, executive editor at the University of Michigan Press, I would not have started this project. The students in my fall 1997 graduate seminar, “Nineteenth-Century Racial Formations,” Mark Adams, Henry Butler, Bradley Dilger, Youlanda Freeman, James Gentry, and Kim Martin, all read A Colored Man Round the World and offered good advice on what was needed in the introduction and annotations. I particularly want to thank Bradley Dilger for doing a thorough reading of the text.

Bertram Wyatt-Brown has been a wonderful colleague. He gave me invaluable suggestions for researching Dorr’s life and responded promptly to my numerous e-mail queries. John Grabowski and Ann Sindelar of the Western Reserve Historical Society were extremely helpful in enabling me to find materials on Dorr during my visit to Cleveland. Ellen Harrington did the necessary research on Fellowes and Dorr at the Wilson Research Center at New Orleans. John Leavey checked all the French annotations and helped me with many of the complicated ones. Carol Murphy kindly sorted out the Creole French for me. Tom Gallant provided assistance with some of the historical annotations. I also wish to thank Carla Peterson for giving me sound research advice.
