Acknowledgments

This book would not have been possible without the help of many people, and we would like to thank all our colleagues who contributed to this book, especially Myra Strober, who believed in this project and encouraged it from the very beginning. We thank the Atlantic Philanthropic Society, which provided each of us with funding for a course release to concentrate on this project and for a one-day workshop that was structured similarly to the book itself. We would also like to thank the participants at the workshop for providing feedback on both the theoretical foundations and the course specific examples that are contained in this volume. Throughout this project Denison's John W. Alford Center for Service Learning and the University of Richmond's Center for Service Learning provided both financial and professional support. In addition we acknowledge the support of Ohio Campus Compact.

Both of our institutions, the University of Richmond and Denison University, provided valuable resources necessary for the completion of this book, including secretarial work (thank you, Judy Thompson). Thanks to Ellen McCarthy at the University of Michigan Press for her enthusiasm and editorial assistance.

Finally, we dedicate this book to students—past, present, and future. We appreciate the commitments of former students to the experiences to which they were exposed, the fact that our current students constantly challenge us to make economics real for them, and all future students who will be challenged to put economics to work in the world in which they live.
