To All Those Working for Peace, Social Justice, and a Diverse Democracy

Acknowledgments

We wish to thank all the authors for their intellectual contributions to this book and for their tireless efforts to advance the practice of intergroup dialogue and create a more just world. For many of our authors (and friends) this is part of a continuing history of collaboration in social justice work, and we look forward with great anticipation to strengthening and continuing our ties with many of our new colleagues whose work is represented in these pages.

This idea for this book first arose out of discussions of the planning group for the Conference on Intergroup Dialogue on the College Campus convened at the University of Michigan in November 1997. That planning group consisted of several of the contributors to this book, including Mark Chesler, Sylvia Hurtado, David Schoem, Todd Sevig, and Stephen H. Sumida. The participants at that conference represented a remarkable gathering of deeply knowledgeable and highly experienced individuals dedicated to advancing our understanding and practice of intergroup dialogue. The discussions of that conference were so open, honest, and inspired that we felt even more convinced of the value of putting in writing some of the important ideas and lessons generated by our colleagues.

We were most gratified to have brought together for the first time the leading voices on intergroup dialogue in higher education. Jonathan Hutson and Rosemary Fennell, among others, urged us to broaden our scope even further in order to engage the world of intergroup dialogue in K–12 schools, community settings, and the corporate sector. We are most thankful to them for that very sound suggestion, and this book reflects our effort to address that broader vision. We also extend our appreciation to Pat McCune and Bess Chuang of UM's Dialogues on Diversity, who did so much to organize the January 2001 Conference, "In Search of Common Ground: Finding Our Way in a Diverse Democracy," based on the work of the authors of this book.

Mark Chesler has been of great assistance throughout this project in many ways, including helping to conceptualize the book (with the other members of the planning group) and organizing the case studies on the workplace. Chavella Pittman has been a core member of our working group from the start. She was of great assistance as a member of the planning group in helping to organize the conference and has helped with a great many of the details of making this book a reality. We are very appreciative of Pat Preston's work in compiling the subject index of this book.

We are thankful to Ruby Beale, Charles Behling, Teresa Graham Brett, Mark Chesler, Patricia Gurin, Diana Kardia, Ratnesh Nagda, Shari Saunders, Todd Sevig, Stephen Sumida, Monita Thompson, Jesús Treviño, and Ximena Zúñiga for all they have taught us over the years about intergroup dialogue. We also want to thank Robert Corcoran, Tina Fernandez, Marjorie Green, Karen Elliot Greisdorf, Gretchen Groth, Rita Hardiman, Jonathan Hutson, Scott Marshall, Michael McCormick, Martha McCoy, Joseph McKenna, Mike McQuillan, Cassandra Mitchell, Lester Monts, Maria Ramos, James Saucedo, Allison Smith, Lorraine Tiven, and Wayne Winborne for all their interest and support in the development of this project.

Beverly Tatum and Maurianne Adams were most valuable from the very start in helping us identify potential publishers. Martha McCoy and Joseph McKenna were particularly helpful in securing certain endorsements and they, along with Karen Elliot Greisdorf, Jonathan Hutson, and Lorraine Tiven, helped tremendously with dissemination of the book. We are very pleased to have this book published by University of Michigan Press and to have the opportunity to work again with their outstanding editors, Mary Erwin, Kelly Sippell and Christina Milton, and with other fine staff such as Mike Kehoe and Giles Brown. We also want to acknowledge our appreciation of the College of Literature, Science and the Arts and of Marvin Parnes for support from the Office of the Vice President for Research at the University of Michigan.

Finally, we wish to thank our families for their love and support during the process of bringing this book to print. Karyn, Adina, and Shana make all this worthwhile for David. Intergroup relations has been a part of Sylvia's daily life with Eric, who supports her research and diversity work in many ways.
