

acknowledgments

I would like to thank my colleagues and students in the School of Literature, Communication, and Culture of the Georgia Institute of Technology for their support and patience with my nattering about glam rock for quite a few years. I particularly want to acknowledge the students who have participated over the last three years in my Music as Performance course, the proving ground for my approach here. I would also like to thank all those, too numerous to mention, who provided me with venues at conferences and universities in which to present this material: I profited enormously from the feedback. A shout-out particularly to Vivian Patraaka, whose timely invitation made it much easier for me to finish the project. And thanks to Laci Reed for canine companionship.

A number of people were kind enough to read and comment on early versions of these chapters: Susan Fast, Judith Halberstam, Jon McKenzie, Richard Pettengill, and Peter Shapiro. Thank you all. Thanks also to “anonymous” readers Will Straw and Maria Delgado for your positive reinforcement and good suggestions.

Special thanks to LeAnn Fields for her unflagging support and faith in the project.

Portions of the introduction were published originally in “Performance Analysis and Popular Music: A Manifesto,” Contemporary Theatre Review 14.1 (2004). Portions of chapters 1 and 5 appeared in “Good Old Rock and Roll: Performing the 1950s in the 1970s,” Journal of Popular Music Studies 15.2 (2003). An early version of chapter 6 appeared as “I Wanna Be Your Man: Suzi Quatro’s Musical Androgyny,” Popular Music 23.1 (2004). “The Inauthentic Voice: Vocal Production in Glam Rock,” a schematic version of chapter 5, was published in Kunst-Stimmen, ed. Doris Kolesch and Jenny Schrödl (Bonn: Theater der Zeit, 2004). These materials are reprinted here by kind permission of their original publishers.
