

Acknowledgments

Several of the essays in this volume were first presented as papers at various meetings of the International Organization of Scenographers, Theatre Architects, and Technicians (OISTAT). I owe a debt of gratitude to my many friends in that organization too numerous to single out, and particularly to my colleagues on the History and Theory Commission. My involvement in OISTAT came about through my editorship of Theatre Design & Technology, the journal of the U.S. Institute for Theatre Technology, from 1978 to 1988. I am particularly grateful to those in USITT who supported me and sent me to the various meetings at which many of these papers were presented, especially Dr. Joel E. Rubin and Sarah Nash Gates. The late Edward F. Kook, a founder of USITT, urged me (literally commanded me) to write about designers, so I owe much of my career to his prodding.

Several essays in this collection reflect the crucial input of the editors who published them in their journals and books. I would especially like to thank Helmut Grosser and Karin Winkelsesser, former and present editors of Bühnentechnische Rundschau for translating and publishing two of these articles. It has also been a pleasure to work with Claude Schumacher of Theatre Research International, Theodore Shank and Adele Shank of Theatre Forum, Vera Gottlieb and Paul Allain of The Cambridge Companion to Chekhov, Deborah Geis and Steven F. Kruger of Approaching the Millennium, Stuart Hecht of the New England Theatre Journal, Sarah Weiner of the Wallach Art Gallery, and Marc Hacker of the David Rockwell office. I thank Enoch Brater, who was editor of Theatre Journal at the time “Postmodern Design” was published and, as the advisory editor of Michigan’s theater book series, encouraged me to pursue this book. And I am grateful to Rebecca Mostov, Marcia LaBrenz, and particularly LeAnn Fields of the University of Michigan Press, who made this possible.

I owe a great deal to my students Megan Smith and Anne Gridley and to my son Isaac for his support and help in putting this book together.

The first thing my late wife, Ruth Bayard Smith, would turn to when opening a book was the acknowledgment section in order to see how the author thanked his or her spouse. Thus, writing this is particularly hard. Over the years I have become so used to submitting my work to her for advice and editing that I find myself at a loss without her invaluable input. Ruth did, in fact, read most of these pieces when they were first being written, but if the final versions and recent creations contain infelicities, awkward locutions, or vague referents (my most consistent fault in her opinion), it is because of the lack of her keen eye and editorial skill. Without her patience, support, and love through the all the previous years, none of this would have been possible. This book is dedicated to her memory.
