of police interrogation rooms and illuminated the legal issues relating to police interrogation and confessions.*

Acknowledgments

Although nearly all of the analysis contained in this book is new, I have at various points drawn from my previously published work in presenting accounts of either particular cases or Supreme Court doctrine. I would thus like to thank the following copyright holders for permission to excerpt material from the original sources:

Adapting to Miranda: Modern Interrogators' Strategies for Dealing with the Obstacles Posed by Miranda, 84 Minnesota Law Review 397 (1999) by Richard A. Leo and Welsh S. White. Reprinted with permission of the Minnesota Law Review and Richard A. Leo.

What Is an Involuntary Confession Now? 50 Rutgers Law Review 2001 (1998) by Welsh S. White. Reprinted with permission of the Rutgers Law Review.

False Confessions and the Constitution: Safeguards against Untrustworthy Confessions, 32 Harvard Civil Rights–Civil Liberties Law Review 105 (1997) by Welsh S. White. Reprinted with permission of the Harvard Civil Rights–Civil Liberties Law Review.

Miranda's Failure to Restrain Pernicious Interrogation Practices, 99 Michigan Law Review 701 (2001) by Welsh S. White. Reprinted with permission of the Michigan Law Review.

I would also like to thank several people whose assistance enhanced this book's quality. Albert Alschuler's comments on drafts of several of my chapters significantly advanced my understanding of the issues I address. John Parry has contributed valuable critiques of my writing and presentation. Richard Leo has been a constant source of support and assistance not only in helping me collect the material necessary to write this book but also in advising me as to how to deal with empirical issues. And Yale Kamisar, to whom the book is dedicated, has contributed not only through his comments on some of my chapters but also through his own writings, which have illuminated the subject of interrogations and confessions and precipitated my interest in writing a book of this type.

Finally, I would like to express my appreciation to the people who provided indispensable assistance in putting the manuscript together: the members of the Document Technology Center, LuAnn Driscoll, Karen Knochel, Darleen Mocello, Valerie Pompe, and Barbara Salopek, who went to extraordinary efforts to prepare the manuscript; my research assistants, Doug McKechnie and Gary Regan, who assisted in finding difficult sources; and my wife Linda, whose proofreading and other support was invaluable.
