

Acknowledgments

I wish to thank several colleagues and friends for taking an interest in this project and for helping me along the way. Richard Boyland, Bryan Caplan, Nicole Crain, Matt Dobra, John Dunham, Jim Miller, Clair Smith, Dean Stansel, Bob Tollison, and Wayne Winegarden offered constructive comments on the manuscript. In addition, four anonymous reviewers for the University of Michigan Press offered detailed suggestions on an earlier draft. Carol Robert assisted cheerfully in the chores required to move the project forward from its crudest stages to the final product. I am grateful to my editor, Ellen McCarthy, for her oversight, encouragement, excitement, and patience. Mary Meade, Kevin Rennells, and Ann Schultz at the University of Michigan Press guided me through the production hoops. Jean Crain and John Gilchrist provided the family push that never allowed me to give up. Alexander Crain and Juliet Crain made me want to connect to at least two readers 20 years down the road. I am also grateful to many students at George Mason University who listened patiently to a host of half-baked ideas. Partial financial support for the project was generously provided by the James M. Buchanan Center for Political Economy, the Center for Study of Public Choice, the Mercatus Center, and the Phillip Morris Management Corporation. All errors remain my responsibility.
