It is difficult to imagine what this book would have looked like without the eloquent intermezzi and mornings of excellence with Sam Slote, the helpful suggestions of Luca Crispi and Stacey Herbert, the refreshing talks with Bert Bultinck and Geert Buelens, the encyclopedic gravities shared with Luc Herman, the computational and other support from Edward Vanhoutte, the opportunities to present the results of these investigations offered by Daniel Ferrer, Almuth Grésillon, and Vivian Liska, the transcription sessions and advice from Nathalie Mauriac Dyer and Bernard Brun at the Centre d'études proustiennes, the efficient assistance of Martina Peter and the whole staff at the Thomas Mann Archive in Zurich, the stimulating correspondence with Peter Shillingsburg, George Bornstein, Mats Dahlström, Hans Walter Gabler, Marcel De Smedt, Almuth Grésillon, G. Thomas Tanselle, and Hans Zeller, the encouragements of experienced Joyceans and scholars such as Joe Schork, Fritz Senn, Bill Cadbury, David Hayman, Robert Bertholf, Joris Duytschaever, Vincent Deane, the stimulating exchange of ideas with Ingeborg Landuyt, Wim Van Mierlo, Erika Rosiers, Laurent Milesi, Finn Fordham, Greg Downing, Mikio Fuse, Robbert-Jan Henkes, Erik Bindervoet, Liesbeth Van Gool, and Aida Yared, the interest shown by Bodo Plachta, Peter Robinson, H. T. M. van Vliet, the fruitful workshops with Adriaan van der Weel, the unparalleled support of my parents, the necessary distraction offered with great enthusiasm by Oscar and Lina, and the endless patience of the annaliviest of plurabelles, Isabelle Sevens. But one thing is certain: the resulting Textual Awareness would be inexistent without the interest in genetic criticism aroused by Geert Lernout's radical love of the word, his truly Bloomian empathy, and his unremitting support and advice.
