

Acknowledgments

AP

ACKNOWLEDGING THE MANY DEBTS we have accumulated during the years we have worked on this project is a pleasure, not only because writing these words of thanks means we no longer have to endure questions about when the “Perot book” will be finished. This project has taken many twists and turns since we began in the summer of 1992 with a national survey of potential volunteers in the emerging Perot movement. Throughout the project we have been fortunate to have the assistance and support of an ever increasing set of friends, colleagues, family members, and party leaders and officials in completing this book.

Without the willingness of individuals in our samples of potential Perot activists and party contributors to participate in repeated waves of surveys between 1992–2000, our research would not have been possible. Brad Harris, our first contact in the Perot campaign, deserves credit for suggesting we sample from the hundreds of thousands of callers to the toll-free number set up by the Perot campaign in 1992. Clay Mulford, who was involved from the campaign’s inception and was campaign chair when Perot reentered the race in October 1992, helped us to secure the 1992 sample as well as a 1996 sample of Reform Party contributors. We owe a debt of thanks also to the Democratic and Republican national committees (and particularly to Janice Knopp and Albert Mitchler at the RNC and Don Fowler and Faith Brown of the DNC) for supplying us with parallel national samples of major-party contributors.

As the project proceeded, we conducted in-depth interviews with relevant participants. Clay Mulford increased our indebtedness to him by agreeing to be the first to provide crucial information about the 1992 Perot campaign. Jack Gargan, Perot's first volunteer and the last chair of the Reform Party before Pat Buchanan's campaign in 2000 was also a great resource.

Others were also generous with their time and information. Dave Sackett, of Lance Tarrance Associates; Joe Gaylord, one of the architects of the Contract with America; Congressman Bill Paxon and Maria Cino, respectively former chair and executive director of the National Republican Congressional Committee; and Bill McClintock of William McClintock Associates aided our understanding of the 1994 election campaign and its outcome. Orson Swindle, the first chair of United We Stand America and an advisor to the McCain campaign; Rick Davis, John McCain's campaign manager; Cliff Arnebeck, former chair, Coalition to End the Permanent Congress; and Bill McInturff, McCain's pollster, gave us important insights linking the Perot and McCain campaigns.

Our ability to conduct the surveys would not have been possible without the generous assistance of the National Science Foundation, which awarded us three research grants in support of this project along with several supplemental and Research Experience for Undergraduates (REU) awards (SES-9211432; SBR-9410869; SES-9987446). Data Recognition Corporation provided excellent service with our surveys under the watchful eyes of Deanna Hudella, Carmen Wilson, and Julie Roles, whose professionalism, care, and good humor we probably took too much for granted.

We also had generous support from the College of William and Mary, the University of Colorado, and the University of California, Davis. We are grateful to the Institute of Behavioral Science at the University of Colorado for providing us and our graduate students office space and facilitating our collaboration over seven years when the Rapoport family summered in Boulder. Walt Stone is also grateful to Stanford University's Department of Political Science and the Hoover Institution at Stanford for support and space during an extended leave.

We were blessed with a dedicated group of graduate and undergraduate students, from and with whom we learned a great deal. Colorado students who worked on this project were Lonna Atkeson, Paul Gentile, Patricia Jaramillo, Jennifer Koester, Jay McCann, Randall Partin, David Ungemah, and Lori Weber. On the William and Mary side Brian Berg, Will Blake, Karen Bruner, Mark Burton, Stephanie Caucutt, Brent Colburn, Lauren Fasler, Rachel Fitzgerald, Will Gomaa, Jonathan Kajeckas, John Kauffman, Elizabeth Leon, Doug McNamara, Kris Miler, Richard Perry, Jonathan Pierpan, Jon Rodger, Brian Spang and Andy Tomlinson provided important assistance. Greg Pastor has the distinction of being the only student at both Colorado and William and Mary. Other student assistance came from Lydia Tolles (Stanford) and Ryan Claassen, Monique Schneider, and Jennifer Soares (UC Davis). There may be others we have failed to mention—if so, we are no less grateful to them.

Several scholars generously provided us with data, including Patrick Brandt, Christian Collet, Gary Jacobson, and Gerald Wright. Richard Winger, of Ballot Access News, gave us assistance and information on a number of matters related to third parties in U.S. politics.

Our intellectual debts are acknowledged in our citations to the extensive scholarly literature on which we draw and to which we hope to contribute. In addition we have benefited from comments, suggestions, advice, and support on every aspect of this project from friends and colleagues: Alan Abramowitz, Lonna Atkeson, David Brady, Richard Cook, Larry Evans, Fritz Gaenslen, John Geer, John Green, Ed Greenberg, Bob Jackman, Mary Jackman, Dave Lewis, Jani Little, Zeke Little, Cherie Maestas, Sandy Maisel, Tom Mann, Jay McCann, John McGlennon, John McIver, Kelly Metcalf-Meese, Joel Schwartz, Karen Schwartz, Pat Seyd, Pev Squire, Mike Tierney, Lori Weber, Herb Weisberg, Paul Whiteley, Marshall Wittman, and Gerald Wright. Two anonymous reviewers read the manuscript for the University of Michigan Press and offered many helpful suggestions.

Ron Rapoport would also like to thank Ken Sherrill, who introduced him to political science as a freshman at Oberlin, and Paul Dawson and Jere Bruner who nurtured that interest and delivered him to the University of Michigan, where he had the good fortune of working first with Kenneth Langton and then Kent Jennings. Much of what he brought to this project is attributable to the generous tutelage provided by these mentors.

While working on this book, we have been fortunate in having the advice of several editors whose commitment and interest aided our progress. Nancy Davidson, now retired from Brookings, provided lunches and architectural tours of Washington, DC, along with encouragement and support early in the project. Jim Reische at the University of Michigan Press has been supportive, enthusiastic, and patient in guiding our work into print. His understanding of and appreciation for our project—not to mention his taste in restaurants—make him the ideal editor. Thanks as well to Kevin Rennells and other staff members at The University of Michigan Press for the care they took in editing and producing our work.

Our wives and children tolerated our absences and distractions with grace and humor. Patricia Rapoport and Ann Cassidy-Stone contributed beyond all reckoning; we lack the means to express adequately our gratitude to them. Our children, Abby and Emily Rapoport, and Ken, Jenny, and BJ Stone, grew up hearing about this project and generously lent their time to a variety of tasks. If, in spite of all the able assistance we have received, errors of fact, omission, or interpretation remain, we plan to blame each other.

We dedicate this book to our parents, who first introduced us to the wonders and excitement of politics.

Williamsburg, VA, and Davis, CA, June 2005