

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Heartfelt thanks to the editors at the University of Michigan Press for their willingness to take on a project that touches on controversial issues, at a time when concern for the bottom line often encourages timidity among those who should be championing democracy on and beyond the campus.

We would also like to thank the anonymous readers for their insightful comments on how to improve the manuscript.

To our contributors, a big thank-you for your patience during the long journey to print.

We would like to thank Duke University Press for giving us permission to reprint the following essays:

Malini Johar Schueller, "Area Studies and Multicultural Imperialism: The Project of Decolonizing Knowledge," from Social Text 25.1 (2007), pp. 41–62.

Ashley Dawson, "The Crisis at Columbia: Academic Freedom, Area Studies, and Contingent Labor in the Contemporary Academy," from Social Text 25.1 (2007), pp. 63–84.

Malini Johar Schueller and Ashley Dawson, "Academic Labor at the Crossroads? An Interview with Andrew Ross," from Social Text 25.1 (2007), pp. 117–132.

Bill V. Mullen, "Blacklist Redux: W. E. B. Du Bois and the Price of Academic Freedom," from Social Text 25.1 (2007), pp. 85–104.

Vijay Prashad, "Teaching by Candlelight," from Social Text 25.1 (2007), pp. 105–116.

We would also like to thank Michigan State University for giving us permission to reprint Sophia McClennen, "E Pluribus Unum / Ex Uno Plura: Legislating and Deregulating American Studies post 9/11," CR: The New Centennial Review 8.1 (2008): 145–75.

Ashley would like to thank the City University of New York, whose generous sabbatical leave policies are in no small part responsible for the successful completion of this project. Of course, these policies are a result of the hard bargaining and solidarity of the Professional Staff Congress, which Ashley would also like to acknowledge. Both in New York and Florida, our academic home-grounds, concerted attempts by administrators to restructure the university and disempower faculty have made the completion of this project more compelling. The fortitude displayed by the members of the Graduate Student Organizing Committee during a brutally long strike against the ruthless administration of New York University, and the continuing efforts of the United Faculty of Florida to fight layoffs of faculty at the University of Florida, provided tremendous inspiration and a sense of real urgency during the long gestation of this manuscript.