THIS BOOK IS A culmination of research and writing on kinship and diasporas over the last decade. Most chapters represent an extension and elaboration on previously published materials. Chapters 1 and 2 were written, in the original format, in collaboration with Martin Sherman, whose scholarship and clear thinking enriched me greatly. In chapter 3 I drew, in addition to my own work, on my collaborative works with Barry Bristman. Chapter 4 was originally conceived in a joint project with Tamara Cofman-Wittes, a superb scholar of conflict resolution. It first appeared in Yossi Shain and Tamara Cofman, "Peace as a Three Player Game: The Role of Diasporas in Conflict Resolution," in Thomas Ambrosio, ed., Ethnic Identity Groups and U.S. Foreign Policy (Westport: Praeger, 2000). Some ideas in this chapter also appear in Yossi Shain and Ravinatha P. Aryasinha, "Spoilers or catalysts? The Role of Diasporas in Peace Processes," in Edward Newman and Oliver Richmond, eds., Challenges to Peacebuilding: Managing Spoilers During Conflict Resolution (New York: United Nations University Press, 2006). Chapter 5 was originally published with Aharon Barth, who taught me so much about international relations theory and its application. I would like to thank the following journals for their permission to reprint material for this book: International Organization, Political Science Quarterly, Nations and Nationalism, Nationalism and Ethnic Politics, and SAIS Review.

Throughout this work I have benefited greatly from other scholars and students who have worked with me on other projects and writings that are not represented in this volume but influenced my thinking nonetheless. Above all I am grateful to Tanja Flanajan and Ariel Ahram, my superb assistants and cowriters. I am also indebted to my colleagues and friends Robert Lieber, Gil Merom, Josh Mitchell, Aharon Klieman, Avi Ben Zvi, and Azar Gat for their ideas and support.

Fellowships from the Center for International Studies in the Woodrow Wilson School at Princeton University, the Center for Democracy and the Third Sector, and the Posen Foundation have helped me in conceiving and finalizing this project. I am also grateful for all the support I received from Georgetown University's Department of Government and Tel Aviv University's School of Government, my two generous academic homes. Evgeni Kluber and Jessica Gheiler helped in preparing the index.

Finally, I would like to thank Erin Carter and the staff of the University of Michigan Press for their outstanding editing skills; Melissa Spence, my invaluable assistant and deputy director at Georgetown University's Program for Jewish Civilization; and Limor Rachmanov, my devoted assistant at Tel Aviv University.
