*For Sarah,
who made this possible,
and Abraham,
who reminded me daily of the value of small things*

Acknowledgments

My sincere thanks to Ed Folsom, who provided invaluable feedback on the early drafts of this book and a wealth of support, of various kinds, over many years. Thanks also to Bill Brown and the anonymous reviewers who provided detailed and insightful criticisms of the manuscript (any flaws in the book are failures to live up to their astute recommendations and are therefore wholly my own). I am grateful also to Barbara Eckstein, who encouraged me many years ago to pursue the questions that led to this book; Doris Witt, who was a steady source of encouragement throughout the writing of the manuscript; Ken Cmiel, who provided invaluable assistance in the early conception of the project; Brooks Landon and Bluford Adams for their suggestions on chapters of the book; and Martha Patterson for helpful conversations during revisions. Thanks also to the University of Iowa for a generous fellowship to support the writing of this work, the University of Calgary for a research grant to help with its completion, and the interlibrary loan staff at both universities for their help in acquiring research materials.
