
MARKET DREAMS

Elaine Weiner

Market Dreams

Gender, Class, and Capitalism
in the Czech Republic

THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN PRESS

Ann Arbor

Copyright © by the University of Michigan 2007
All rights reserved
Published in the United States of America by
The University of Michigan Press
Manufactured in the United States of America
© Printed on acid-free paper

2010 2009 2008 2007 4 3 2 1

No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form
or by any means, electronic, mechanical, or otherwise,
without the written permission of the publisher.

A CIP catalog record for this book is available from the British Library.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Weiner, Elaine, 1968–

Market dreams : gender, class, and capitalism in the Czech Republic /
Elaine Weiner.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN-13: 978-0-472-09988-7 (cloth : alk. paper)

ISBN-10: 0-472-09988-4 (cloth : alk. paper)

ISBN-13: 978-0-472-06988-0 (pbk. : alk. paper)

ISBN-10: 0-472-06988-8 (pbk. : alk. paper)

1. Sex role—Czech Republic. 2. Czech Republic—Social conditions—1993– 3. Czech Republic—Economic conditions—1993–
I. Title.

HQ1075.5.C94W45 2007

305.48'9623094371090511—dc22

2006038424

For my mother, Wanda Weiner

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
1 Introduction	1
2 Two Logics, One Life	23
3 A Velvet Vision	41
The Economic Liberalization (and Liberation) of the Czech Republic
4 Rational Economic (Wo)Men	69
Market Mantras and Managers
5 No (Wo)Man's Land	95
The Postsocialist Purgatory of Czech Female Factory Workers
6 Conclusion	119
Appendix: Sample Demographics	131
References	137
Index	151

Acknowledgments

WRITING THIS BOOK has been a long journey. Many people supported me during the various phases of this project, and I am certain that without their sustenance and fortification, I would have never reached this journey's end. All of them thus warrant my sincere gratitude.

This work started as a Ph.D. dissertation at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, and now finishes as a book published by the University of Michigan Press. In a wonderful way, it has come full circle. It is truly a product of this exemplary institution. It would not, however, have ever come to fruition without the many individuals there who enlivened my "sociological imagination" and provided the necessary intellectual guidance as well as nurturance. Above all others, Michael Kennedy deserves my deepest thanks. During our first meeting in September 1996, he promised to be a good mentor to me. His generosity of spirit and its constancy indeed made him a good mentor, but his capacity to see and show me the way past obstacles that hinder many people made him more than that—a great mentor. His vision transformed mine, and I am truly grateful for this enlightenment. My appreciation also goes to Alford Young, in whom I found a methodological comrade. He taught me a great deal about qualitative research methods, patiently tolerating my sometimes unrelenting queries about the hows and whys of qualitative research. Sonya Rose receives my sincere gratitude for steering me back on track simply by recommending that I refamiliarize myself with my data. I thank Abigail Stewart for rightly demanding that my representations of Western feminists and feminism(s) be fair. I hope they are. I am also indebted to Margaret Somers, who played a pivotal role in shaping the ideas advanced in this book. Her theoretical insights on narratives inform much of this work. Another member of the faculty at the University of Michigan who merits special thanks is Zdenka Brodská, who spent countless hours, with unflinching patience, teaching me the Czech language—Děkuju Vám! I also thank the members of my dissertation support group—Jessica Charbeneau, Louise Dobish, Julica Hermann, and Susan Lee—for helping to keep me “sane” during my final year of graduate school. Finally, I thank the University of Michigan Press and especially Jim Reische, who offered enthusiastic support for this book.

Since the fall of 2003, McGill University has been my institutional home. I thank my colleagues and students for making it a supportive and stimulating place. In particular, I appreciate those who took the time to read and comment on portions of this book, especially Natalie Carlino, Kathleen Fallon, Juliet Johnson, and Suzanne Staggenborg. In the wider academic world, I thank Kristen Ghodsee for her invaluable advice and generous support. I also thank the reviewers for University of Michigan Press, who provided incredibly positive and helpful feedback.

This work also benefited from the comments of audiences at the many forums where I presented various parts of it, including the Institute of Sociology of the Academy of Sciences in Prague, Czech Republic; the 2001 George Klein Symposium at Western Michigan University; the 2002 Junior Scholars’ Training Seminar cosponsored by the East European Studies program at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars and the American Council of Learned Societies; the Placing Gender in Postcommunism Conference held by the Havighurst Center for Soviet and Post-Soviet Studies at Miami University; the 2002 National Convention for the American Association for the Advancement of Slavic Studies; the Gender and Transition workshop held at New York University’s Center for European Studies; the McGill-Copenhagen workshop at McGill University; the McGill Centre for Research and Teaching on Women seminar series; the Gender and the Post–East–West Divide conference at Babes-Bolyai University in Cluj, Romania; and the National Science Foundation’s workshop on the Cultural Politics of Globalization and Community in East Central Europe.

I was fortunate to receive financial support for the many facets of this project—language training, fieldwork, analysis, and write-up—from a variety of organizations and institutions. The American Council for Learned Societies provided a grant for in-country intensive language training in 1995. In 1997, I received, for similar purposes, a summer Foreign Language and Area Studies (FLAS) fellowship funded by the U.S. Department of Education and administered by the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Center for Russian and East European Studies. A Fulbright-Hays Doctoral Dissertation Research Abroad Fellowship funded my fieldwork. A Predoctoral Fellowship, Dissertation Fellowship, and a one-term Dissertation Grant from the Horace H. Rackham School of Graduate Studies at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, provided support during the analysis and initial writing phases of this project.

The Gender and Labor Markets division of the Institute of Sociology of the Academy of Sciences of the Czech Republic provided institutional affiliation and support during September 1999–October 2000, when I was in Prague to collect data. I am especially indebted to Marie Čermáková for making these arrangements possible. Lenka Veselá, Markéta Vorosová, and Anna Komzaková served as my research assistants at various points during my fieldwork. I am immeasurably grateful for their tireless work. Monica Janochová taught me to speak Czech fearlessly. She is unequivocally one of the most gifted teachers I have ever met.

This book would not, however, have come to fruition without the seventy-four Czech women who shared with me their personal stories about their postsocialist everyday work and family lives. I am forever touched that these women entrusted me with their private thoughts and permitted me to give them a very public voice. I am also appreciative of the many individuals—academics, trade union representatives, ministry officials, and others—who helped me to understand the broader structural landscape of Czech women's lives.

Throughout this project, my family has shared in the intensity of its tribulations and triumphs. My mother warrants particular mention as she has been one of my greatest advocates, one of my toughest critics, and an indefatigable editor. I also thank many friends for their encouragement. Special gratitude goes to W. Carter Smith and Samantha Stone for their unceasing can-do attitude and for their willingness to review the many iterations of this work. Their friendship is one of my life's great treasures.