ABOUT THE AUTHORS

David R. Jones is an associate professor of political science at the City University of New York's Graduate Center and Baruch College. His research focuses on the U.S. Congress, legislative behavior, and elections. He is the author of Political Parties and Policy Gridlock in American Government (2001). His work has also been published in such scholarly journals as the American Journal of Political Science, the Journal of Politics, Legislative Studies Quarterly, and Political Research Quarterly. He regularly serves as an exit poll analyst for such media outlets as CBS News and the New York Times.

Monika L. McDermott is an associate professor of political science at Fordham University, where she studies voting behavior, political psychology, and public opinion. Her research follows multiple lines of inquiry, including public opinion of Congress, as well as voting cues and information shortcuts—most recently with regard to religious stereotypes and elections. Her work has been published in some of the profession's top journals, such as the American Journal of Political Science, the Journal of Politics, Political Research Quarterly, and Public Opinion Quarterly. McDermott is also a survey researcher, having conducted election surveys for the Los Angeles Times, the CBS News Election and Survey Unit, and the Center for Survey Research and Analysis at the University of Connecticut. She has been an election and polling consultant for CBS News since 2002.