

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	xiii
Introduction: Human Behavior Is the Core Business of Theater	I
The Measures Taken	2
Theory and Practice	3
How We Solved Our Problems	4
Two Time Frames: Play within a Play	5
Agitprop: A Theatrical Metaphor	6
The Actor Is Essentially a Performer	7
The Basic Elements of Real-Time Acting and Theater	7
Real-Time Acting for Postmodern Theater	8
What Is in This Book?	10
How to Use It	11
PART I: PREMISES AND INSPIRATIONS
I. The Dilemmas of the Actor: Who Is He and What Is His Task?	15
The Actor's First Paradox: What Is Real?	15
Acting Is a Mysterious Craft . . . but It Is a Craft!	16
The Simultaneity of Acting and What Is Acted	17
Who Is the Actor	18
Quadruple Identity	20
Intuition	21

Different Acting Conventions	21
Embodiment	22
2. The Heart and Soul of the Actor: Stanislavski's Approach	24
Drama Is Action	24
Physical Action and the Four W's Plus Two: Who, What, Where, When, Plus Why and What For	25
Interpretation: Text and Subtext	26
Objectives, Superobjectives	27
Imagination, Magic If, and Emotional Memory	27
The Actor's Second Paradox: Acting Consciously	28
The Actor's Third Paradox: The Difference between Rehearsal and Performance	29
Feeling and Thought	31
Feelings and Thoughts Are Intertwined	32
Playing the Result: Misunderstandings about Feeling and Thought . . .	32
. . . and How to Avoid Them	33
How to Play an Emotion	35
Motive	36
Direct Motives	37
Indirect Motives	38
Avoiding Speculation About Motives	39
Intention	40
Speculation about Intentions and a Confusion of Words	41
3. The Actor as Eyewitness to Social Processes: Brecht's Approach	43
"Not This, but That"	43
The Actor as Eyewitness: The "Street Scene"	44
Gestus	45
Gesture and Attitude	46
Motives Lie Primarily outside the Theater, Intentions within the Play	48
Amazement and Wonder	49
The Alienation Effect	50
The Chinese Actor	51

PART II: ACTING IN REAL TIME

4. The Technique	55
Presence of the Actor	55
Double Function of the Actor	56
Feelings and Thoughts of the Character/
Feelings and Thoughts of the Actor	57
No Need to Justify Oneself	58
The Actor Makes His Presence Known	59
Action of the Acting Itself	60
Two Realities	62
Alternating	62
Simultaneous	64
Making a "Proposal"	64
Conditions for the Presence of the Actor	65
The Actor as Host, the Audience as Guests	66
When and Where Does the Play Take Place?
Now and Here!	66
The Real-Time Actor Is Like a Musician	67
Instruments of the Actor 1: Imagination	68
Theatrical Images, Not Illustrations	71
Montage and (De)construction: The Actor at Work	74
The Space between the Lines of the Text	76
Instruments of the Actor 2: Body and Voice	77
Instruments of the Actor 3: The Mind, the Heart,
and the Senses	79
Instruments of the Actor 4: Language	80
Fine-Tuning the Instruments 1: What Does the Actor See?	81
The actor sees his fellow actors	82
Seeing and being seen: the actor sees the audience	84
The audience is your friend	85
Seeing and looking during the performance	86
The narrators of the play are insiders	87
Comment—no comment	88
Fine-Tuning the Instruments 2: What Does the Actor Hear?	91
Consequences of Active Seeing/Looking and Hearing/Listening	92
Active rest	93
Connection and trust	93

Focus and concentration	94
Alertness	98
In the moment	99
Nothing can go wrong	100
Rehearsal Process and Improvisation	103
Reading a text	103
Different forms of improvisation	104
Improvisations on form: An inexhaustible wealth of images	105
The Illusion of Reality vs. the Reality of the Illusion	110
Dreams don't fall from the sky	110
A different use of the same elements	110
Conditions of the stage itself	112
Form and format	113
Instruments of the Theater Itself 1: Stage and Stage Design	114
Use of the space	116
Use of chairs and other furniture	117
Instruments of the Theater Itself 2: Props and Objects	119
Instruments of the Theater Itself 3: Costumes	120
Instruments of the Theater Itself 4: Music and Sound	122
Instruments of the Theater Itself 5: Light	125
Instruments of the Theater Itself 6: Media—Film and Video	128
Staging, Blocking and Choreography	131
Rehearsal and Production	133
Rehearsal and Performance	135
Ensemble	136
Postmodern Theater and the Actor as Author:
The Fate of Men Is Man-made	137
 Chapter 5: The Workshop	140
How It Started	140
The Epic Genre in Literature and the Epic Theater	141
Creating a Distance	142
Acting in Real Time: A Technique	143
Setup of the Workshop	144
Step 1. The "I" Story	144
Narrator and audience	144
Process, not result	145

Telling a Story in the First Person: The Assignment	145
Choosing a story	145
Preparations: setting up the space and focus	146
Postexercise Observations	147
1. Past and present	147
2. Memory is activated—truthfulness	147
3. Remembering feelings and thoughts: images, words, and movement	148
4. Chaos and repertoire	149
5. Recognition and assimilation	150
6. Commitment	151
7. Practicalities	151
8. What else is noteworthy?	152
9. Themes and historical events	153
10. Given circumstances	154
11. Plot and structure	155
Telling the Same Story Again in the First Person: The Assignment	156
Dramatic conflict	156
Postexercise Observations	157
1. Distance and catharsis	157
2. Internalizing	158
Step 2. The “He/She” Story	158
Telling the Story in the Third Person: The Assignment	158
What the first person sees: the omniscient narrator	158
Postexercise Observations	159
1. Neutrality doesn’t exist	159
2. Point of view	160
Telling the Original “I” Story in the Third Person, from Someone Else’s Perspective: The Assignment	161
Insiders and outsiders	161
Form, content, and the narrator’s instruments	162
Postexercise Observations	163
1. Justification and “character”	163
2. Five exercises in one	164
3. Deeper meaning	165
Telling the Original “I” Story in the Third Person, from Different Points of View: The Assignment	166

CONTENTS

The pure narrator: deconstructing the story	166
Many points of view	167
Postexercise Observations	169
1. Hidden points of view	169
2. The narrator's own feelings and thoughts	169
Step 3. Theatrical Forms of a Story	170
Before history there are stories	170
Stories in daily life	170
Theatrical forms of stories of today	171
Different story forms	171
Other story forms: from puppet play to performance piece	173
Solo Performance. Telling Your Story in a
Theatrical Form: The Assignment	174
From subjective to objective, from descriptive to active, from past to present	174
Performance in real time	175
Preparations: concept, scenario, theatrical tools, space,
and duration	176
Staging yourself in public	177
Postexercise Observations	178
1. Evaluation of the performance	178
Step 4. Someone Else's Story	179
Natural distance and critical examination	179
Telling Someone Else's Story in the Third Person as a
"He/She" Story and Choosing a Point of View:
The Assignment	180
Point of view and connection	180
Postexercise Observations	180
1. Different dramaturgical structure	180
2. Language and imagery	181
3. The story of a role	181
Telling Someone Else's Story in the First Person as if It
Were an "I" Story, from a Point of View:
The Assignment	182
Postexercise Observations	182
1. Self-created safety net	182
2. Audience as witness	182

Step 5. Montage of the Stories	183
Different formats of the workshop	183
Making a Montage Piece of All the Stories as a Performance Piece: The Assignment	184
6. The Exercises	186
Active Seeing and Looking	186
Active Hearing and Listening	190
Active Rest	192
Grounding, Centering and Relaxing	194
Exercise A: Grounding	195
Exercise B: Centering	195
Exercise C: Relaxing	196
Exercise D: From Relaxing to Grounding	196
Connection and Trust	199
Exercise A: Isolations	199
Exercise B: Walking	201
Exercise C: Floating	202
Exercise D: Falling	203
 PART III: REAL-TIME ACTING AND THEATER IN HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE
7. Origins and Conventions	207
A Different Look at Theater History	207
Our Need for Realism	208
Child's Play	209
Primitive Ritual: Awe, Fear . . . and Hope	211
Gods and Worship Ritual	213
From Ritual to Performance	214
Stories and Mythology	215
From Story to Action	216
The Birth of Written Drama and the Secular Actor	218
XXX-Large: Bigger Than Life	221
Distance from Reality	222
New Drama in a New Theater	223
Teatro Olimpico: An Architectonic Miracle	224
The Deceived Eye	226

Acting in the Wrong Setting	227
Oohs and Aahs and Opera	228
Toward a Truthful Representation of Reality	230
The Paradox of the Actor	231
Confusion and Controversy	232
The Meiners	233
8. New Conventions and Innovations	234
Positivism and Naturalism	234
Edison, Wagner, and the Fire Department	235
Fourth Wall and Peephole	236
Stanislavski's Psychotechnique	237
Realism as a Style and a Convention	238
Identification and Identity of the Actor	239
Illusion of Reality	240
The Virtually Invisible Actor	241
Semblance of Perfection and Accomplished Facts	242
Film	244
Rational Distance and the Instinctive
Identification of the Audience	245
Reaction	245
Brecht and the Epic Theater	247
Alienation Effect	249
Stylization	250
Again Innovations	252
The "Second Metaphor" and the Presence of the Actor as Himself	253
Real-Time Acting: A Form and a Technique for Postmodern Theater	256
The Flat-Floor Theater, the Transparent Actor, and the Magic of Theater	258
Notes	259
Illustrations	following page 204